

the death-haunted city because of his infatuation with the beautiful Tadzio, his memorable angel of death. Antiguan writer Jamaica Kincaid's My Brother (November 17th) is a poignant memoir about her youngest brother Devon's AIDS-related death in which she explores the nature of love, family ties, and loss. William Faulkner's As I Lay Dying (December 8th) told by 15 narrators in 59 short chapters, is the story of the death of Addie Bundren and her family's shocking journey through Mississippi as it travels with her corpse to her family's cemetery. In our final meeting, we'll discuss the first chapter of The Oxford Book of Death (December 15th), a collection of poems and prose extracts from writers of the past 2,500 years ranging from Homer and Plato to Shakespeare and Woody Allen.

Ironic as it may seem, good writing on death is among the liveliest we have. And in case any of you thinks our subject dour, we hope you'll take solace in the news that our Spring course will be "Love in Five Wednesdays."

*Any editions of Tolstoy and Mann will do. The chapter from The Oxford Book of Death is a free handout distributed at our penultimate meeting. For the Faulkner & Kincaid, I strongly recommend the following editions:

Faulkner, As I Lay Dying, Vintage, 1957, 250 pp.

Kincaid, My Brother, Farrar, Straus and Giroux, 1998, 208 pp.

Come one, come all; come for one, come for all! All are welcome!

Immigration as a Moral Issue Reading Group

In October our Intern Minister, Rebecca Froom, will lead a reflection and discussion group in response to Margaret Reagan's recent book The Death of Josseline (Beacon Press, 2010). Detailing heartbreakingly real human stories from the US / Mexico border, The Death of Josseline invites us to engage the complex ethical, moral and spiritual challenges presented in these borderlands and consider how we as a religious community might be called to respond. More information about dates and times as well as opportunities to acquire the book will be forthcoming.
